This is a bi-monthly series created to help members learn about the different elements involved in developing strong projects.

Each meeting focuses on a different topic. After a presentation on the session's topic, the format transitions to a participant Q&A, where attendees ask questions of the presenter and each other. In each session you will hear the questions and learn from other community's shared challenges.

Assessing Project Feasibility - April 8, 2025

Every project starts with an idea – whether it first arises in one person's mind or is engendered through discussion. Beyond that, local capacity to see projects through is critical to their success, and selecting the right project idea is critical for pursuing grants. Funders are looking for projects that meet local priorities, are supported by residents, are well thought out, and make for exciting grant announcements and ribbon cutting ceremonies. Even though project types can be similar, each one is unique in its characteristics, scope, intended outcomes, and the people involved. A feasibility study helps you see past hope and speculation so you can focus on realistic expectations.

Feasibility studies help you:

- more clearly define a project's scope of work,
- start locking down a realistic budget,
- create an initial project schedule, and
- mitigate and eliminate risks that could cost you time and money.

When it comes to developing projects, patience and proper planning can save taxpayers money and local officials a lot of headaches.

Team Building - February 11, 2025

- Do you have a project idea and need a team to help you explore and develop it?

- Do you have a team and want to build community support for the project?
- Is your project ready for funding but you need internal support for grant management?

Project development is not a solo sport. It takes teams – a team to explore and develop the idea, a team to build community support for a project's eventual long-term operations and maintenance, a team to find and manage funding. While every team begins with one person, you don't need to feel alone. Explore how to build internal and external teams, the importance of communications, and the building blocks for successful community engagement.
